

PROFESSIONAL RECOGNITION PROGRAMME FOR RESEARCH MANAGEMENT

Did you know that you can earn training points towards professional recognition when completing training offerings that are endorsed by the Training Endorsement Committee (TEC) of the International Professional Recognition Council (IPRC)?

WHAT ARE TRAINING POINTS?

When applying for professional recognition (see <https://iprcouncil.com/>) applicants have to capture their research management and administration competence, experience, contributions and achievements and substantiate that with evidence. As part of this portfolio of evidence, applicants are also required to capture their completed training. In 2021 the IPRC introduced a training point system to encourage participation in quality training for research managers and administrators to advance their competence. These training points can be used when applying for professional recognition and also when renewing or upgrading a professional designation. There are designations for new entrants to the profession (Research Administrator Professional – RAP), for mid to advanced career research managers (Research Management Professional – RMP) and for senior research managers in a research management leadership or strategic role (Senior Research Management Professional – SRMP).
